Q. 1. Describe the fast pace of modern life and its harmful effects on man, as presented in 'The Pace for Living'.

Answer: In 'The Pace for Living', R. C. Hutchinson describes the fast pace of modern life and its harmful effects on man. The modern world moves very fast, and man is always in a hurry. He wants to do everything quickly, but his mind and body cannot keep pace with this speed. The writer calls himself a slow thinker, and he finds it difficult to follow fast-moving films, plays and conversations. The cinema, the radio and the fast-moving traffic make him nervous and confused. He cannot enjoy the beauty of life because he is always running after time. This fast pace also harms man's health. It causes worry, tension and tiredness. People have no time to rest, to think or to enjoy nature. They eat hurriedly, work hurriedly and sleep hurriedly, and as a result they become weak and unhappy. Hutchinson says that this fast pace of life has made man a slave of the clock. He suggests that we should slow down and live a calm and peaceful life. We should take time to think, to read and to enjoy the simple pleasures of life. Only then can we be healthy, happy and truly free.

Q. 2. Give a character sketch of Gillu as described by Mahadevi Verma.

Answer: Gillu was a baby squirrel whom Mahadevi Verma found in a wounded condition and brought home. She nursed it with great love and care, and soon Gillu became a dear member of her family. Gillu was a lovely and intelligent creature. It would sit on her shoulder, eat from her plate and play with her. It understood her moods very well and always stayed near her. When she was ill, Gillu would not leave her bedside and seemed sad and worried. It showed its love for her in many small ways and became her true companion. Gillu was also very playful and active. It loved to run about the house and climb the curtains. But it was never naughty or harmful. Whenever she called it by name, Gillu would at once come running to her, and it seemed to understand her words. When Gillu died, Mahadevi Verma was full of grief. She buried it under the chameli plant in her garden. Gillu's life shows that even a small animal can love deeply and faithfully. It was loving, faithful, intelligent and sensitive, and its memory remained fresh in the writer's heart for ever.

Model Passage 1 — 'The Value of Time':
Time is the most precious thing in our life. Once lost, it can never be regained. A student who wastes time in idle talk and useless games falls behind in studies. On the other hand, a student who uses every hour wisely learns more and succeeds in life. Great men in history were all careful about time. They planned their day and followed their plan strictly. If we value time, time will value us.
